

Did you know?

Instead of just reciting the same old story, improvise a little. Use different accents for the characters, add drama with hand gestures, build anticipation by including pauses, and let the emotions of the story show on your face.

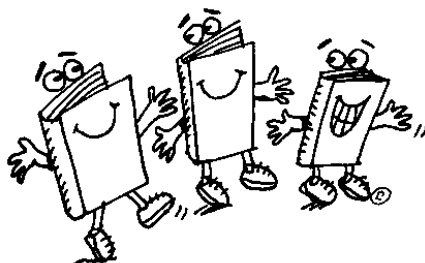

Did you know?

Toddlers may initially squirm and become distracted during book time, but eventually they'll learn to stay put for the duration of a book. Along with a longer attention span will come more reading comprehension and better memory retention, all of which will serve your child well when he/she enters school.

That's five hundred books! You are halfway to your goal!!

What were your five favorite books from this hundred?
